Several thousand dollars of this fund was subscribed by R. M. Scruggs, the remainder being raised by the Church Extension Society and the members of the Carondelet

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC. Lessons From Paul: "How We May Get His Passion for Souls." (Re-mans I, 1-17.)

BY AMOS R. WELLS. Before we can have Paul's passion fo souls, or helpfully exercise it, if we have it purity and power. As some one has said sels, but it does not long remain clear, and if it did, the state of the vessel will fill with disgust even the thirsty men that may approach it. We must "receive grace and aposticship" (v. 5) from Christ, as Paul did; we must "be established" (v. 1), in spiritual gifts, as he was, before we cen establish others. As Keble wisely sung regarding Andrew, the first Christian seeker for souls:

Entice him home to be forgiven.

Till be, too, see his Saviour plain.

Along with our preparation for soul-winning God is preparing souls to be won by us. Says Doctor Francis E. Clark: "Every word that God puts into your heart for another will find some one ready to receive it, prepared by God for its reception as you were prepared by him to deliver it." No man can win souls if he tries to win souls alone. God is his partner.

We have a right, then, to be ambitious, to seek large results. "While we sim at few." William Arthur urges, "we shall win but few; for that our successes shall take their proportion from our faith, is the universal law of the service of Christ."

There will be opposition, of crarss. A telegraph operator, when the reservoir at Johnstown, Pa., burst in a deally flood, used the swift power of electricity to warn persons at a distance; but some did not need the warning and were drowned. A young woman's dress caught fire in New York. Frenzied, she ran screaming through the street, and fought off her would-be rescuera till she was fatally burned. Men are quite as foolish about the fire and flood of sin.

Tet it is God's work and not ours. We are to plant, but God gives the increase. It is meddling with God's affairs to worty about results.

The motive? Our own highest good, partly. Hear Whittier:

Heaven's gate is shut to him who comes slone; Save thou a soul, and it shall save thy own:

ly. Hear Whittier:

Heaven's gate is shut to him who comes slone:
Save thou a soul, and it shall save thy own.

But, far higher than that, the good of men and the joy of our Lord. Do you believe in eternity? Do you believe that character in this life can be formed for eternity?

Do you believe that Christ can form character in this life can be formed for eternity?

as studied in the last lesson, the army of the Philistines fied, pursued by the encour-

APPOINTED—(Verse 5.) Youth as he was, David received a Captain's commission at the hand of Saul, who, at the beginning, had utmost confidence in him. With prompt obedience he went to the field of conflict leading the men of war intrusted to him. In every engagement he behaved himself, wisely, displaying military genius of a high order and winning victory after victory. In those days the arts of war were more easily learned than now. There was no meed of long schooling, such as is given at West Point in this country. Natural bravery, joined with intelligence and loyality were the principal qualities, and, if physical strength were added, a soldier of the first rank would be the result. It is believed that David was not 21 years old, yet he had suddenly risen from the position of a shepherd to be a chlertain and a hero. And in this new position he easily gained applause. The servants of Saul and the masses of the people sounded his praises and rejoleed in his achievements.

HONORED—(Verses 6 and 7.) From the earliest times down to and including our day the people of all nations, whether civilized or savage, have assigned the highest place to those who have succeeded in war. The victorious General upon his return has been received with demonstrations of approval. These have been in various forms, sometimes by the loud acclaim, sometimes by the riumphal arch, sometimes by gifts and speeches, but always suited to the genius of the people. In Israel the women, heid in greater esteem than in any other part of the world, were employed to express the popular rejoicing. This appears to have been the method for many centuries. (Ex. xv. 20.) There was great propriety in such a mode, for the women more than any other class, suffered when defeat came, and they had, therefore, cause for joy when their husbands and sons won the battle. They bore with them instruments of music and they had, therefore, cause for joy when their husbands, and David his ten thousands." Thus it was that they have struggled for a time apparent the en intention to kill the young man whors in hated. The spirit of God had departed from him, and an evil spirit had been permitted, as on a former occasion, to possess him. (I Sam. xvi. 14.) It is not true, as some think that God sent this spirit, but that; a demon came because God suffered him to 800. (Job. 1, 12.) There is not room here to discuss this subject at length. It is quies sufficient to say that in both the Old Testament and New, estanic influence over men is recognized as possible (Luke xxi. 1) when they depart from God. While their religious exercises were in progress the unsuperting David contributing his part and the King acting as a domestic priest, the latter suddenly cast his javelin, saying to himself: "I will smite David failed because he was evidently under divine protection. Saul recognized this fact, and hated him all the more, and with that hatred came a genuine fear. Unable to restrain his evipurpose, he was unwilling further to attempt its execution lest some judgment should be meted out by the Almighty. It was felt to be a hazardous and presumptuous act to destroy the life of one who it in the keeping of God. Saul who had lose the divine favor, dared not gain irry to attempt who retained the favor of God. He therefore, rescried to an expedient that the hands. Placing him in command of a themson the favor of God. He therefore, presence. Saul sent David Robbattl, thinking to expose him to peril fail (Verse II.) If siain by the Phillistines, no blame would attach to the King, who would, nevertheless, be freed from his rival, and who might possibly regain his place in the esteem of the people. The motives were concealed from human eyes, but the great searcher of hearts saw distinctly the interition of the act.

EEHAVED—(Verses I and IS.) It is impossible to harm a good man. (I Peter, ill. 13.) He may indeed be the object of the fill will that propriety which has a honest, interplid David in battle, always the search of the prople followed him wherever he went designed of those noble qualitie went out from them in their name and be half, and he returned again to them. In going and coming he was one of them, admitted for what he was, but loved because he stood as their representative, ever true to them, ever contending for them, ever defending them against enemies. In their eyes he was an incurnation of bravery, of wisdom, of public spirit. They as the whole nation in him. Their ideals and applications and hopes centered in him. Withal he was a unifying personality. The north and south equally gave him affection. The revoit that came at the death of followon, nearly a century later, dividing the land into two great parts, had been anticipated in the jealousles that wisted between Judah and Ephraim, the two chief tribes. But now, while David conducted himself with such propriety Israel and Judah were as one, and all hearts gave to kim their love. It was a splendid triumph for the youth, a beautiful testimonial, a complete defeat for the jealous, God-forsaken King, a promise of that day when a new King, a promise of that day when a new King should reisn in israel.

REFLECTIONS—The lesson presents two men in striking contrast—one steadily and surely advances. Each becomes a worthy subject of study, one to be a warning and the other an inspiration. Saul began with generous impulses besiowing favors and delighting in the exercise of confidence as he received a young man into his home. Shortly the praises of the people bestowed upon this same man changed his love into jealousy and hatred. Then came loss of God's favor, the presence of an evil spirit, and an attempt to murder, ending in fear and deception. David, on the other hand, receives his honors unsought and bears them with humility. He does not retailate when attacked but seeks safety in flight. He constantly maintains his faith in God and weats unbroken the spottess robe of anyer iffe. He goes to his post of duty when assigned even though it is one of danger, and there deports himself in a way to win the popular polices to his post of duty when assi
